BurnettSeverity of sinonasal diseases evaluated by otorhinolaryngological and endoscopic endonasal preoperative examinations in otorhinolaryngological practices. To investigate the awareness, understanding, and attitudes of otorhinolaryngologists regarding the severity of sinonasal disease. A questionnaire was distributed to 300 otorhinolaryngologists with more than 15 years of experience who completed it. A total of 159 questionnaires were returned and 141 of them were valid for analysis. Most of the respondents (84.9%) felt that rhinosinusitis with nasal polyps, acute rhinosinusitis, and sinusitis are relatively benign. However, in the case of chronic rhinosinusitis with nasal polyps (CRSwNP), 16.3% and 22.7% of the respondents felt that the severity of the disease was the same as that of CRS and chronic rhinosinusitis without nasal polyps (CRSsNP), respectively. Regarding maxillary sinusitis, 5.6% of the respondents estimated the severity of severe, 75.6% of the respondents assumed it was intermediate, and 19.7% felt that the severity was mild. In the case of frontal sinusitis, 11.4% of the respondents assumed the severity of the disease to be severe. When questioned to distinguish CRS from non-CRS, 18.1% of the respondents answered that a differential diagnosis of CRS from non-CRS should be performed before surgery. Most
